Welcome to the latest issue of our In-Store Insights.

At POPAI, we've always prided ourselves on understanding our industry's needs, being champions of innovation and sustainability and offering professional forums where our members can engage.

There's no skirting around the fact that the last 18 months saw the rug pulled unceremoniously out from under our feet. Which meant that our usual calendar of events and our Awards had to undergo a major revamp.

On which note, I hope you all enjoyed our first-ever POPAlexpo. Bringing together industry-leading suppliers with a professional online user experience, we were the innovators extraordinaire for the industry. It was a fantastic live experience packed with speakers, ideas and initiatives. You can find out all the news in our special report on page 13.

The two main features of the show were innovation and sustainability - clearly watchwords of the moment, as these are two of the most sought-after categories in the POPAI Awards. Now in its 15th year, we're celebrating with a fantastic record number of entries, standing at almost 230. And we are looking forward to the event with hope, already selling tickets to the Gala dinner on 5 October. See you there?

Now to the magazine, and we have our usual mix of informed insights and research. First up, who doesn't love a discount store? Not too many of us by the looks of things. Our investigation into this ever-growing category shows one thing is abundantly clear: competitors must not discount the discounters. Read the report on page 5.

Our Shopper Intelligence report on page 9 takes an in-depth look at the often-overlooked world of secondary display. Enjoying a brief surge in popularity during early lockdown, the report looks at the role of this display, how retailers can harness it to best effect and, crucially, asks: who is shopping secondary?

Consumer electronics are with us pretty much all day every day. From your fitness tracker to your phone, your TV to your kettle, it's hard to imagine them not being in our lives. But with such a vast array of products and ranges, it's essential that retailers know who they're targeting. Our Shopper Segmentation report on page 23 outlines the eight most common type of consumer electronic shopper, helping retailers to effectively power their promotions.

Finally, on page 27 our GDR report explores how some retailers are doubling down on the way they use their physical spaces to create places omnichannel shoppers want to spend time. Welcome to the new era of culture club retail.

Enjoy the issue!

DISCOUNTERS

SHOPPER INVESTIGATION

Once seen as the domain of the cheap but not cheerful, discount stores have made an epic rise in popularity over recent years.

As bargain-loving Brits continue to seek ways to reduce their shopping bills, so the ongoing rise of the discounters continues. This growing industry was worth £11.1bn in 2020 and is estimated to be worth £12.6bn by 2022. By then, discounters are expected to have a 5.8% share of the overall UK grocery market, growing at four times the pace of the rest of the market combined – a clear sign for competitors to sit up and take notice.

Shopper habits

We asked our shoppers about their shopping habits at discounters. Half said they used a discount store once a week, while 22% visited at least twice a week. The discounter stores our shoppers used on a monthly basis were Aldi, Lidl and B&M.

Food was by far the most popular purchase, with 88% of shoppers buying biscuits, crisps and snacks, and 83% of shoppers choosing tinned food, packets and cereals.

Our research

We asked 102 shoppers to visit a selection of the following discounter retail stores: Aldi, Lidl, Poundland, Poundstretcher, B&M and Home Bargains.

First impressions

Windows are often the first place shoppers look, and promotional messaging here can help lure them into the store...or not.

Of the stores visited, 41% used price promotion for their key window messaging. Meanwhile, 32% opted for seasonal window messaging.

It was abundantly clear from our shopper answers which display types were most prominent when first entering the store, with 39% telling us they instantly noticed a gondola end display or bulk stack.

Free-standing display units were also eye-catching. Messaging was fairly mixed – most shoppers noticed price promotion, save and new products

SHOPPER INVESTIGATION

On average, three pieces of promotional material were found by our shoppers in the discount store windows

Inside the store

In and around the store, end-of-aisle display, free-standing display units and shelf-edge signage were the most frequently seen display types. The least prevalent in-store displays were digital screens and floor graphics.

When we investigated the promotional messaging used in store, the answer was overwhelmingly 'price'. This messaging was found in three-quarters of stores visited, with 'save' the next most popular message.

Navigational signage was found in 57% of stores, leaving a rather surprising 43% with no directional signage at all. However, the same number – 43% – of shoppers said it was 'quite easy' to find their way around.

According to our shoppers, midway into the store was the favourite positioning by far for seasonal messaging, adopted by a convincing 59% of stores.

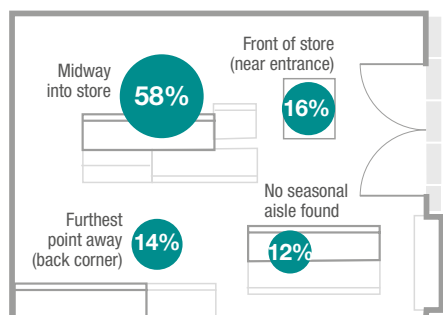

The queue and checkout areas proved to be extremely popular places for discounters to display products, a practice adopted by a staggering 97% of these retailers.

SECONDARY DISPLAY

SHOPPER INTELLIGENCE

Secondary display, as the name suggests, is often overlooked by shoppers in favour of the main aisles. But clever use of this type of display by retailers can pay dividends.

Shopper Intelligence provides consistent, tracked shopper metrics that help retailers and brands better meet the needs of their shoppers.

During the first COVID-19 lockdown in 2020, retailers saw something of a seismic shift. Panic buying led to low stock and empty shelves, and the traditional methods to entice shoppers to buy more were replaced by restrictions and product purchase limits. One short-term trend in the height of this lockdown was an increase in purchases from secondary display. However, as availability quickly rose, these figures decreased again. An interesting question to pose is this: is it possible to return to these higher levels during 'normal' times? This could be a challenge, perhaps. But this shift in behaviour during lockdown has proved that secondary display not only has a place in store, it has an extremely valuable role.

Source: Shopper Intelligence

Who is shopping secondary display?

Understanding how behaviour and attitudes change when a shopper buys from a display is the first step in meeting the challenge of creating winning secondary displays and encouraging shoppers to stop, look and buy from them. Identifying these aspects can help point to some consistent traits to drive secondary display success.

Shoppers more likely to engage with and buy from secondary displays tend to be younger, less affluent and less loyal shoppers.

SECONDARY DISPLAY

SHOPPER INTELLIGENCE

Displays need to have broad gender appeal to maximise opportunities.

What do these shoppers want?

While price is important, shoppers are likely to be looking for other factors such as premium quality, innovation and authenticity.

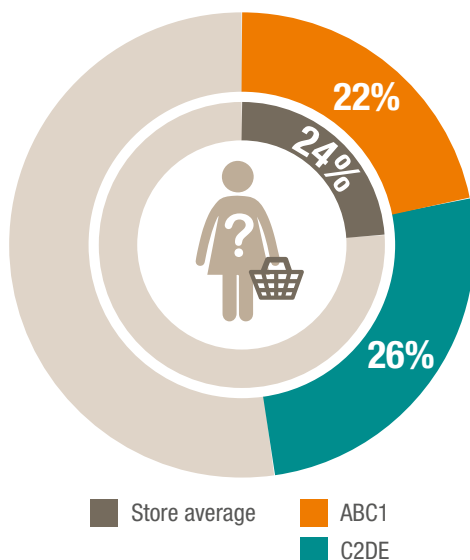

Clearly though, not all categories are equal. Retailers need a deeper dive to successfully prioritise where to invest. The best way to do this is to compare the categories, looking at impulsivity and incrementality.

Clearly, appealing to the younger shoppers would be a good starting point for retailers in creating a secondary display strategy.

Unsurprisingly, 'high impulse and high incrementality' categories, such as everyday chocolate confectionery, are going to be very strong candidates for secondary display. At the other end of the spectrum, categories like root vegetables which have 'low impulse and low incrementality' would not benefit from a secondary display strategy. Between these two extremes, the remaining categories, which are either strongly impulsive or strongly incremental but not both, will also need different approaches.

Any price messaging should have clear standout on displays to help appeal to these shoppers.

The world of consumer electronics

Imagine life without a smartphone, a TV, a kettle, a computer. When we consider the number of electronics we use in our daily lives, it is no wonder that the consumer electronics market is thriving. In 2021, revenue in the market amounted to £21.9bn. This is set to increase, with the market expected to grow annually by 1.35% (compound annual growth rate 2021-2025).

SHOPPER SEGMENTATION

WHO'S BUYING?

It is clear that consumer electronics retailers and brands have massive opportunities to tap into this ongoing demand for their products. But with such a wide range of items with varying functions, getting it right is no mean feat.

Here, we have taken an in-depth look at who is buying consumer electronics, and have identified eight main types of shopper.

Prudent Purchasers

These shoppers are looking for products that can fulfil their needs now and continue to do so in the future. Not ones to rush into major spending decisions, they choose carefully and must feel confident that they are making the right choice before they part with their cash.

Function Focussed Shoppers

These are smart shoppers, not influenced by flash advertising and branding. They can cut through the noise and see a product for exactly what it is and what it has to offer.

Tech Innovators

These shoppers are into one thing: the latest technology. They want the latest gadget, whether it is a mobile phone, tablet or new gaming system. It is all about the brand and being the first to experience it.

Researchers

As the name suggests, these shoppers will research every aspect of a product before making their purchase. They like to be fully informed so will usually have undertaken a lot of research online already and have read customer reviews before setting foot in store.

Infrequent Big Spenders

These shoppers are not often in store. In fact, they only purchase once a year at most. Infrequent Big Spenders are looking for one big purchase or several big purchases at the same time.

Bargain Hunters

These shoppers are out looking for a deal. Often without big budgets to spend, Bargain Hunters want value for money and then some.

Browsers

These shoppers are not in store to shop for consumer electrical products or for any real purchasing reason. In fact, they are simply there to kill time before meeting friends for lunch, were just passing on their way somewhere else, or just mooching around on a Saturday afternoon.

Access our complete report to find out more about the eight types of shopper.

CULTURE CLUB RETAIL

GLOBAL TRENDS

In this report we look beyond technology to consider how brands and retailers are doubling down on the strengths of physical spaces to create stores where today's omnichannel customers want to spend time. Welcome to Culture Club Retail.

THE CLUBHOUSE APPROACH

There are two key ways that companies are buying into Culture Club Retail. The first is The Clubhouse Approach. By merging retail space with dining, leisure pursuits and networking opportunities, brands are giving their VIP customers permission to dwell and offering them a share of ownership over the space.

Diesel has launched a new store concept in Shanghai that mixes retail with dining. The Brave Bar takes up about one quarter of the store's footprint. It is positioned in the middle of the location, with the store's retail offer taking place around the outside edges. The brand sees it as an attempt to build a store around human connections, rather than the explicit act of buying products.

High-end British cycling brand Ribble has opened a state-of-the-art 2,000sqft showroom to act as a focal point for its local and online community. Each of the brand's bike models is positioned on a neon light box plinth to elevate it to the level of a priceless museum artefact. Digital screens next to each bike allow in-store customers to find out more information and watch videos about the product. The space will also be used as a virtual showroom by the Ribble Live team of experts.

Cultural Showrooms

The second part of this report explores the Cultural Showrooms that lean on the theatrical possibilities of physical retail to create engaging showrooming opportunities. These retailers and brands create unique journeys or experiences for shoppers that amplify their core values and attitudes.

Japanese telecoms provider KDDI has opened an eye-catching and immersive flagship in Ginza, Tokyo, which is half store, half exhibition space. The three-storey 'GINZA 456 Created by KDDI' location has a traditional sales space on the top floor, but the bottom two levels are built around theatrical, tech-infused displays that sell the possibilities of 5G.

Retailers and brands should be looking to future-proof their store estates by merging an e-commerce-first omnichannel approach with flagship spaces like these built around Culture Club Retail.

POPAl Sustainability Standard

For Suppliers

The PSS is POPAl's corporate environmental standard aimed at the supply side of the industry.

Becoming PSS accredited provides a number of environmental and competitive benefits:

Showing stakeholders, internal and external, that you are taking sustainability seriously.

Recognition as an environmentally conscious organisation which operates in a cost-efficient and environmentally responsible manner.

Gives you a 'green' competitive advantage, responding to client demands.

Provides a financial advantage by improving efficiencies – the PSS forms a catalyst for further sustainable development.

Encourage better environmental performance from suppliers – by aligning them with your commitment.

“ The PSS is the number 1 sustainability accreditation dedicated to our industry ”
